

One of the finest, most conveniently arranged and most artistic residences in the city has been planned by architect W. D. Kimball for James A. Moore, of the Moore Investment Company, and will be erected on the corner of East Aloha Street and Fourteenth Avenue, on Capitol Hill. The building will be entirely of stone construction, three stories in height, 45.5x51 feet on the ground plan, and will cost approximately $18,000. The stone will be either Tenino or Chuckanut gray sandstone and the fittings and finishings throughout will be of the finest and best. The building will be provided with every modern convenience. The location selected could hardly be improved in the city. It is high and slightly, providing a magnificent view in all directions for miles; it is in the midst of a portion of the city laid out in large lots and where owners are prevented by the terms of their deed from building small, cheap or unsightly buildings; it is in the improved street district and withal is close in, convenient to excellent car service, amid aristocratic surroundings.
